Albert Thompson, city school superintendent

By DALE ANDERSON

News Staff Reporter

Albert Thompson, who served as superintendent of the Buffalo Public Schools during crisis-filled years from 1990 to 1996, died Wednesday in Sisters Hospital after suffering a heart attack at home. He was 63.

Thompson, the first African-American to serve as school superintendent in the city, was diagnosed with multiple myeloma, a cancer of the plasma cells in bone marrow, in April 1995.

Considered a numbers wizard and a nuts-and-bolts leader, he began his 41-year career with the district in 1955 as an industrial arts teacher. He moved to the central office in 1969 and was named an associate superintendent in 1985.

He served as interim superintendent for a year after the departure of his predecessor, Eugene Reville.

"Fiscally, my time was the worst time to be superintendent," he said in a farewell interview on his last day on the job in 1996. "In six years, there was only one year we had a reasonable increase in school aid. Other than that one year, we've had one trauma after the other."

He cited as major accomplishments the establishment of several Quality Schools programs, the expansion of gifted-and-talented programs and construction of the Makowski Early Childhood Center.

Thompson said he also was proud of the growth in business partnerships with schools, which totaled more than 75 when he retired.

He said he would like to be remembered as "somebody who did the best he could."

A Buffalo News editorial praised him upon his retirement for "his personal demeanor, professionalism and sense of integrity."

Born in Buffalo, he attended School 17 and Burgard Vocational High School, where he ran cross country and was on the track team, student newspaper and Student Council.

At the same time, he helped support his family after his father, a Pullman porter, suffered a stroke and died when Thompson was 13.

"We were a welfare family," Thompson said. "My mother did curtains, washing, ironing. I had a job mopping, sweeping, working in the corner store."

At Buffalo State Teachers College, he ran cross country and was a straight-A student. Drafted into the Army, he served in the Signal Corps in Europe.

Thompson's first job as an industrial arts teacher was at School 17. He next went to School 73, where he was building representative to the Buffalo Teachers Federation and encouraged girls to take industrial arts.

Active in volunteer youth work, he met his wife, Freddie, a registered nurse, when they worked together in the Police Athletic League youth program.

During the 1960s, he was a community activist and an area vice president of during years of crisis, dies at 63

BUILD. As a member of the Civic Betterment League, he helped create the first independent Head Start program in the Walls Community Center on Glenwood Avenue.

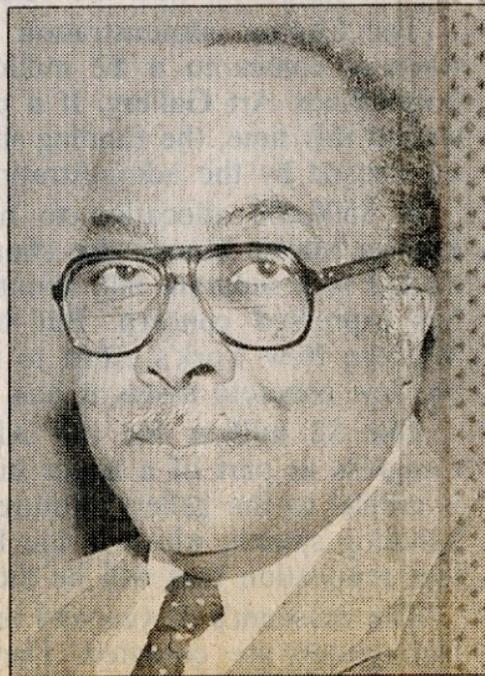

Thompson later taught at Woodlawn Junior High School and in 1969 was assigned to the central administration's Division of Finance and Research. In 1979, he was named an assistant superintendent of schools for finance after serving in that role with a lesser title for four years.

In 1985, Reville named him deputy superintendent, the second-highest position in the system.

In addition to serving as a school administrator, he was Sunday school superintendent for 25 years at Second Temple Baptist Church and was a church trustee.

Surviving, in addition to his wife, are a son, A. Jeffery, and a daughter, Jennifer.

A funeral will be held Saturday at 11 a.m. in Second Temple Missionary Baptist Church, 812 E. Delavan Ave. Interment will be in Acacia Park Cemetery, Pendleton.

Daniel S. Workman Jr., banker, served the East Side community

June 13, 1944 — April 21, 2007

His job was banker.

But Daniel S. Workman Jr.'s avocation was finding ways to help make Buffalo a better place, especially struggling communities on the city's East Side.

A Mass of Christian Burial for Mr. Workman, a retired vice president and regional community investment officer for M&T Bank, will be offered at 11 a.m. Saturday in St. Martin de Porres Catholic Church, 555 Northampton St.

He died Saturday in Roswell Park Cancer Institute after a long illness.

A city resident, Mr. Workman won numerous awards for helping a wide variety of organizations on the East Side, said Sister Philip Marie Cirincione, pastoral associate at St. Martin de Porres.

She described Mr. Workman as a humble, unselfish man who was always willing to pitch in and help, without seeking accolades for his service.

"I knew this man for 40 years, and he's going to be very sorely missed by many people," Sister Philip Marie said. "He was a banker who was always willing to help people and organizations in our neighborhoods."

"He believed in the people of Buffalo, and the only credit he ever wanted was seeing things get done in the city," said Mr.

Workman's wife of 41 years, the former Joanne Hill.

Last year, St. Martin de Porres named Mr. Workman its Man of the Year, the bank named him Manager of the Year, and the Buffalo Niagara Partnership named him Minority Volunteer of the Year. This year, he received the Buffalo NAACP's human relations award for outstanding community service.

He was a director of the Community Action Information Center and Catholic Charities. He was also active with the NAACP, the MADD DADS, the Catholic Diocese Board of Education, the Catholic Central Board, the Oshei Foundation and other organizations.

A Buffalo native, Mr. Workman retired last year after 32 years with the bank. He was a U.S. Air Force veteran and graduate of Bishop Timon High School, the University of the Philippines and the University at Buffalo.

Mr. Workman played the piano, loved music and was known for teaching line dancing to fellow parishioners at St. Martin de Porres Church.

He took a five-year leave of absence from the bank to serve as a deputy special assistant to Hugh Carey, who was governor of New York from 1975 until 1983.

In addition to his wife, Mr. Workman is survived by a daughter, Latrise; a son, Daniel III; a sister, Rita Workman Alleyne; and four brothers, Vincent, Ronald, Rudolph and Warren.

Dr. Lydia T. Wright, broke racial and gender barriers

May 5, 1922 — Aug. 23, 2006

Dr. Lydia T. Wright, who broke racial and gender barriers in Buffalo and was the harbinger of change in Buffalo Public Schools, died Wednesday in Niagara Lutheran Home. She was 84.

Born in Shreveport, La., Dr. Wright grew up in Cincinnati. She attended the University of Cincinnati and Fisk University, and earned her medical degree in 1947 from Meharry Medical College in Nashville, Tenn.

After completing her training at Harlem Hospital in New York City and Children's Hospital in Boston, Mass., she married Dr. Frank G. Evans, an internist, in 1951, and they opened offices on Jefferson Avenue in Buffalo a year later. The first African-American woman to practice medicine in Buffalo, she specialized in pediatrics for 36 years, retiring in 1988.

Dr. Wright was on the staff of several local hospitals and was a faculty member of the University at Buffalo's medical school. She also was a member of numerous professional organizations.

Dr. Wright broke another barrier in 1962, when she was the first African-American appointed to the Buffalo Board of Education. A strong advocate of integration, she was careful to say it wasn't the cure for educational ills.

"Most Negroes look upon

school integration as a guarantee that their children will learn and will soar to great heights of achievement. This is a myth," she was quoted in a 1964 article in The Buffalo Evening News.

"Children coming from homes where there is order and high expectations have a good chance of success in school," she said. "But children from homes where parents seldom read . . . where there is no routine, nor high expectation, these children create chaos in the classrooms. They are the under-achievers and potential drop-outs."

"Whether or not a child attends an integrated school, he never will succeed, unless he receives worthwhile instruction in that school," she said.

During her time on the School Board, Dr. Wright also proposed high schools that specialized in a particular area of the curriculum and drew students from all parts of the city — foreshadowing the magnet school system. Her appointment expired in 1967.

At the time of her death, she was the only living Buffalo resident for whom a public school was named: the Lydia T. Wright School of Excellence on Appenheimer Avenue.

Dr. Wright also broke barriers in the Episcopal Diocese of Western New York in 1967, serving its standing committee as the first woman and the first African-American. She was a member of St. Philip's Episcopal Church and served on its Altar Guild.

She was the recipient of numerous awards and recognition through the years, among them the Red Jacket Award of the Buffalo and Erie County Historical Society, presented to Dr. Wright and her husband in 1980, in recognition of civic service over a period of years.

The NAACP honored her with the Medgar Evers Award in 1988 and the Education Award in 1964, and her biography was featured in the first edition of "Who's Who of American Women."

Besides her husband, survivors include a son, Frank G. Jr.; and a daughter, Tamara E. Rowland.

Services will be held at 10:45 a.m. Monday in St. Philip's Episcopal Church, Sussex and Grider streets, Buffalo.
