A Rockefeller triumph, they're calling it. Nearly everything he wanted, he got. As for what he wanted but didn't get, they will be called back in the summer to give it to him.

That's a reasonably accurate description of the New York State legislative session that just came to a close. Rockefeller was so much in control that he could and did get major pieces of legislation passed within a few hours before adjournment. He extended his "message of necessity" power to consolidate power in the governor's office in a way that must have made Dick Nixon envious.

The sad news for gays out of all of this was that Rocky did not call for the passage of gay rights legislation. And if Rocky doesn't call for it, it's unlikely to be picked up by a scared Republican majority. At least that's the tentative conclusion I've reached after a third season of my own involvement.

We will await a more comprehensive report from the State Coalition's lobbyist, John Howard, who despite our defeats, managed to keep the lid on a number of anti-gay bills during his stay in Albany.

The once-surprising fact now seems like a commonplace observation—that New York State and California are going to be tough States as far as gay legal reform goes. Their political makeup is complex, and despite the greater organization and visibility of gays in those states, legal reform is just going to take that much more effort.

Are we starting over from zero, come January of next year? Definitely not. Except for a few possible vacancies, we'll be talking to the same body of legislators next year. (And the year after that, we'll be talking to about 80% of the same people, if historical patterns remain unchanged.)

What this means is that our lobbying efforts do not begin anew each year. We build upon the years before.

I'm not calling for infinite patience from gay people in New York State. Nor am I discouraging the development of new and different strategies to win our legal rights.

I'm only observing that there is a built-in conservatism about the American legislative process. The only factor that we are sure contributes to legislative success is longevity—success comes to those who come back year after year. And we're going to make it yet, because we're going to come back.
To the Editor:

This Committee does not ordinarily concern itself with membership requirements of homophile groups. It has far too many transcendent matters to concern itself with. But since the question at issue involves the law, I have taken the liberty of trespassing on your pages.

On page 12 of your issue number 5, volume 3 of the 4th inst., you give an account of the debate over removing the age limit for membership in the Mattachine Society of the Niagara Frontier. As has been the case in many other homophile groups where this issue has been discussed, those who proposed the elimination of an age bar proposed the right thing for entirely the wrong reason. In so doing, they reflected the muddled thinking which, regrettably, is all too present in much of the homophile movement.

There is no connection whatsoever between age of sexual consent laws and minimum age requirements for membership in homophile groups. The former has to do with sexual acts, the latter involves the right freely to gather for purposes of public discussion. A sane society must legally set an age limit below which sexual conduct is prohibited, particularly where the disparity in ages between the participants is more than a few years. This is necessary whether or not the parties involved have "consented", since it is a truism to point out that consent on the part of persons below certain ages is no meaningful consent at all. The law quite properly holds that consent on the part of persons below those ages constitutes no valid consent at all. To do otherwise would allow indiscriminate sex between forty-year olds and four-year olds on the specious ground that the four-year old had "consented."

None of this, however, is in any way relevant to the question of membership in homophile organizations or in any other groups, unless they be orgy clubs. What is involved is the right of people in a free society to assemble for the purpose of discussion -- in this case, discussion of homosexuality and of the rights of homosexuals. No free society has ever

The following is the continuation of a series of questions and answers about homosexuality. This series is reprinted from a booklet distributed by GAA in New York, "20 Questions About Homosexuality." MSNF now has reprints of the booklet available locally...the booklet will be available throughout Gay Pride Week.

QUESTION #10: IS HOMOSEXUALITY A MENTAL ILLNESS?

In his famous Letter to an American Mother, Freud stated categorically that homosexuality "cannot be categorized as an illness." Later, some of his followers challenged that view, and their works have become the most "popular" material on the subject. The trend is again reversing, and a great number of present-day psychiatrists side with Freud.

The illness theorists say that homosexuality is the symptom of a larger disease, and the essence of their assertion is that all of their homosexual patients are disturbed. No doubt this is true, say their opponents, but all of their heterosexual patients are disturbed as well.

To assume that the "typical homosexual" is a psychiatric patient is to conclude that all women have tuberculosis from studies made in a sanitorium. (continued on page 14)
PICKUP A VICE COP... It's starting again. This time it's LaSalle Park. Plainclothes Vice Cops are reported to be lurking around, friendly and willing to talk. They are also very willing to make arrests for anything they can reasonably take as a solicitation for sexual activity. If you make any such suggestion or solicitation you can be arrested. Reports are that vice cops lurk around the park, attempting to lure pedestrians or car drivers who may be looking for action, but probably action of a different sort than the vice cop has in mind.

We've also heard that there's a definite plainclothes presence in some of the bars, and thus would be in a position to observe anything that goes on there. If any actual sexual activity ensues, an arrest may follow. Obviously, the use or possession, or dealing in narcotics is also rather vulnerable to arrest. A solicitation in a gay bar is technically in violation of law, but an arrest would probably be unconstitutional, so long as there is no obscene activity involved, nor any really obnoxious behavior.

There's a message. Be aware of how open you are leaving yourself if you engage in park or street cruising. A gay bar is safer. But even there, if you engage in overtly unlawful activity you can not only get yourself in trouble, but the bar owner as well. Keep the action part for later, when you are in the privacy of your own home.

Then the constitution can afford some clear protection.

If you get arrested for loitering (solicitation), it's a violation. A violation, if proven by the prosecution, can end up several ways. The court can impose either a conditional discharge for a period up to a year, or an unconditional discharge. In either case you don't go to jail nor pay a fine, but you do have a conviction. Such discharges are imposed when the court feels that neither the public interest nor the ends of justice will be served by imprisonment or fine. Or, alternatively, the court can fine you any amount up to $250 or sentence you to up to 15 days in jail or both. With the stigma of the conviction what it is, the jail sentence is rarely if ever used, and the fines aren't usually that hefty unless the nature of the conduct or the past record of the individual call for it. In any event, don't go to court without an attorney. If you don't have a job, are not dependent on your parents, or otherwise don't have money, call Legal Aid 853-9555. If you have some money but don't know an attorney, call MSNF 684-5315 and ask for the legal chairperson. We have a number of very competent and reliable attorneys to whom we refer people.

And it came to pass...that the soul of Jonathan was knit with the soul of David, and Jonathan loved him as his own soul...Then Jonathan made a covenant with David, because he loved him as his own soul. And Jonathan stripped himself of the robe that was upon him, and gave it to David, and his apparel, even to his sword, and to his bow, and to his girdle.

Samuel I, 18

(King Saul suffered a monumental military defeat at the hands of the Philistines, and both he and his son, Jonathan, were slain in battle.)

And David Lamented with this lamentation over Saul and over Jonathan his son, and said...:

Thy beauty, 0 Israel is slain upon thy high places!
How are the mighty fallen!
Tell it not in Gath,
Publish it not in the streets of Ashkelon;
Lest the daughters of the Philistines rejoice,
Lest the daughters of the uncircumcised triumph.
Ye mountains of Gilboa,
Let there be no dew nor rain upon you,
Nor fields of choice fruits;

For there the shield of the mighty was vilely cast away,
The shield of Saul, not anointed with oil.
From the blood of the slain,
from the fat of the mighty,
The bow of Jonathan turned not back,
And the sword of Saul returned not empty,
Saul and Jonathan, the lovely and the pleasant
In their lives, in their death they were not divided;
They were swifter than eagles,
They were stronger than lions.
Ye daughters of Israel, weep over Saul,
Who clothed you in scarlet,
with other delights,
Who put ornaments of gold upon your apparel.
How are the mighty fallen in the midst of the battle!
Jonathan slain, upon thy high places!
I am distressed for thee, my brother Jonathan;
Very pleasant hast thou been to me,
Passing the love of women.
How are the mighty fallen,
And the weapons of war perished!

GAYS & PLAYBOY MAGAZINE: In the sept. issue of Playboy Magazine (which will appear on newsstands in mid-August) there will be a panel discussion on "Emerging Sexual Lifestyles." Gays will be represented on the panel by two very able spokespersons - Rev. Troy Perry, founder of the M.C.C. Church and Buffalo's own Madeline Davis. In a Fifth Freedom interview with Ms. Davis, she admitted to a torturous process in arriving at the decision to be on the panel. It was very difficult for her to decide whether to join in the panel discussion at all, because of the rampant sexism incorporated within the entire Playboy mythology. However, her final decision was to do the panel interview, for as she put it, "I think it's important to speak publicly no matter what the vehicle of communication is. Close to four million women read Playboy every month. Even if there were one-millionth of that number, it would be important to talk to those women. If even one woman is able to look at herself and her relations with other women more clearly, then I feel the interview is justified."

GAYS AND WATERGATE: Item: ex-presidential counsel, John Dean, wants immunity from prosecution...he's afraid he'd be raped by homosexuals if sent to prison. Item: Nixon campaign officials reportedly recruited young men to pose as gay liberationists at McGovern rallies...to embarrass McGovern, of course. Item: Nixon people passed out letters with Sen. Muskie's name on them, charging that Sen. Jackson has been arrested in 1955 & 1957 on homosexual charges. There were no such arrests, but the letters were an attempt to "demean" Sen. Jackson...This just points out that we still live in a vast, antagonistic, hetero-dominated society that feels the worst thing they can be labeled is "queer"...who says we don't need Gay Pride Week?

suggested that the right to engage in such discussion should be barred by virtue of age. Conceded that the Mattachine Society, like other private groups, has the right to bar as members whomever it wishes, the fact remains that, when it does limit its membership to those above a certain age it is unwittingly helping to perpetuate two of the myths about gay people which it should be the duty of all gay groups to help destroy. These are (1) the notion that homosexuals seduce the young and (2) the idea that whenever homosexuals gather together, it is only for the purpose of sex.

This is not to suggest that meetings of homophile groups, like Mattachine, are likely to be of much interest to persons below your present minimum age of 17. That is not the point. Whether or not there are a few precocious fifteen or sixteen-year olds who would find your sessions of value and are presently being deprived of the benefit of attendance is not the issue. What is at stake is a recognition that, so long as you remain a discussion and action group, membership in your society should be open to all who wish to attend and become members, regardless of age. This in no way is intended to limit the Society’s right to limit membership for other valid reasons, or to expel members for cause.

No doubt some of the supporters of an age limit cited so-called "legal" reasons in justification. This always amuses me, as a lawyer, since there is not a shred of legal warrant for such a limit. Neither law nor public policy requires imposing a minimum age limit. Invariably it is the amateur "curb-stone" lawyers, never the genuine ones, who raise these imaginary legal problems. I hope your regrettable decision to retain a minimum age limit will be reconsidered, and I especially hope that those who make this move will be better informed regarding the principles involved. Assuming your report of the proceedings in Fifth Freedom to have been accurate, the proposition deserved better than the ill-informed arguments adduced in its favour. Small wonder it was defeated!

Very truly yours,

Arthur C. Warner

NO WORDS

Sometimes I think of that time we had shared together, do you remember?

We looked into each other's eyes, yours so warm, no words were spoken.

My hand was on your small round breast, and your graceful hand was on mine, no words were spoken.

From the silent stillness of the night, we would hear soft sounds of music,

Listen!...no words were spoken.

That night never ended, it was eternity to me, so far, so distant, so beautiful. I was once again with my lover, and

No words were spoken.

No real cross-section of the homosexual population has ever been studied, but all of the existing research done out of clinical settings indicates that the majority of homosexuals are psychiatrically distinguishable from heterosexuals in only one way, our choice of sexual partners. Kinsey reported that of those in his sample with homosexual experience, "few could be described as pathologic." Dr. Evelyn Hooker, head of the National Institute of Mental Health Task Force on Homosexuality, showed psychiatric tests of homosexuals to a panel of clinicians who could not distinguish them from those of heterosexuals and found no greater incidence of mental illness. A British team headed by Michael Schofield gave a battery of tests to groups of homosexual and heterosexual prisoners, psychiatric patients and "others," discovering that "the difference between the pairs of matched groups (prisoners, etc.) were surprisingly small and the differences between the (three) homosexual groups were surprisingly large."

Even supposing that all these researchers chose poor statistical samples, or conducted faulty tests, it is pointed out that the existence of even one healthy individual rebuts the contention that homosexuality is the symptom of an illness.

But the disease theorists have another string to their bow. They say that homosexuality is in itself an illness. Their opponents reply that this is simply a matter of definition, based on the reported unhappiness of some of their patients or on a culturally determined consensus of their colleagues. Were all the Greeks mentally ill? they ask, or all the members of the Siwan tribe? Their answer is no, and they suggest that what many psychiatrists do is to recommend treatment for all those who violate sexual conventions and then proceed to dignose their new patients as mentally ill. If one indication of mental illness is an inability to grasp reality, it is suggested that the illness theorists take another look at themselves.

Why is the disease concept so popular if it's so full of holes? One explanation is that "sin" has become unfashionable and those who still find themselves revolted by homosexuals must find some reason for refusing to see us just as people who, for various reasons, have never learned to obey certain sexual taboos.

It is recalled that in some countries political nonconformity is presently defined as mental illness, and that not too long ago in the U.S., the "illness" of masturbation was "treated" by such methods as castration. As psychiatrist Thomas B. Szasz puts it: We must be careful lest, by defining homosexuality as an illness we merely shift the methods by which we control homosexual conduct. are 'punitive' whereas the sanctions of psychiatry are 'therapeutic.' Then psychiatrists diagnose homosexuality in a setting in which the diagnosis becomes public property - for instance in the military, in government service, in prisons - their work is psychiatric in name only.
