Book Review by Greg Kolovakos

Mishima: Death In A Closet

Before the Japanese author Yukio Mishima committed ritual suicide in 1970, he repudiated one of his novels, Confessions of a Mask. Obviously, for a man so obsessed with virility and toughness, the work seemed to reveal too many of his personal weaknesses. The novel remains, however, an important work by a man who never came to terms with his homosexuality. Unfortunately, Mishima also reinforced many of the negative stereotypes of the homosexual male, and for this reason the novel can be potentially damaging.

This is a painful novel tracing Mishima's growing awareness of his sexual attraction to men and his incapacity to respect himself or to reach the point of coming out. "What people regarded as my true self... was a masquerade," he admitted. His first erections pointed toward his passion for muscular men, pools of blood, and torturous death. As he grew older sexuality and brutality became united in his mind, and Mishima therefore concluded that "the inverted and the sadistic impulses are inextricably entangled with each other." What this false conclusion does to a straight reader's perception of the gay male, I hate to imagine.

Nevertheless, the strengths of the novel rest with Mishima's ability to recreate the painful years of adolescence and early manhood, his early unrequited love affair for a boy in school, his failed attempts at making himself love women, his feeling that he must lie to others about his sexuality. But what remains with the reader after completing the novel is the series of masturbatory visions of blood and death strung across the retina. His brutal visions of beautiful male bodies being tortured and destroyed become obsessive; masturbation becomes his little religion with the phallus as the sacred shrine. Unfortunately the author continues the myth of the over-sexed homosexual. Mishima flirted with suicide, hesitated, attempted to believe that he was no different from anyone else, rejected this idea, and finally hoped for a bloody death in the war.

The author's mind became increasingly confused between his real and assumed identities, and he found it easier to run away rather than to face his real self. Homosexuality was never more than a "demon" to Mishima, and he continually rejected proofs that a gay person (who Mishima never was) is normal. He wrote that "I was made to distrust both my will and my character..." and the reason is clear: he continued to run away from himself and he never respected or loved himself as a human being. Thus, it was an ashamed homosexual who hated himself and who viewed himself as non-human who finally committed suicide.

Perhaps the straight reader may be most impressed with the primitive intensity of blood and sadism in the novel. True, there certainly is no gradual development or growth in the character of the author. But I would suggest that for the gay reader a more important theme becomes evident, that of a homosexual male who died as he lived, hating himself. The weaknesses and distortions of Mishima's self-perception and beliefs are only too evident to the gay reader who does respect himself/herself as a gay person.

But for Yukio Mishima that final ritual suicide must have been the most powerful orgasm in his life of self-hatred.

THANKSGIVING DINNER !!

There will be a Thanksgiving dinner at the Gay Community Services Center. Everyone is invited to participate, especially those who don't have family or friends to celebrate with. The dinner will be on Thanksgiving Day, November 22nd, at 2:00PM. Join your fellow gay brothers and sisters to celebrate and eat Tom. turkey, that is.

Please contact Chuck Nevins to let me know what you'll be bringing or for suggestions. Call the Center - 861-5335

MSMF MEMBERS: elections for member-at-large will be held on Sunday, Nov. 4th at the Mattachine meeting, 8PM. Nominations end on Sunday, Oct. 21st, at the 8PM meeting. Do your part and make sure you vote. Are your membership dues paid ???

Through its many diverse and concerted efforts, the Mattachine Society has helped make Buffalo a better place for gay people to be. To express your support, join our efforts by becoming a member. SONNET TO TOMMASO CAVALIERI by Michelangelo

The seething passions which after Beauty hark
Need not of human folly be the mark;
Let them but ready heart's true molten state
For holy arrows to penetrate its gate.

On leaden lusts the wakening of Love
Sprouts wings, moults feathers; the Above
Lures to its maker that soul which finds
No great satiety in earthbound winds.

The Love I sing flies high. Not for woman—
Who, too unalike, incites men's lust.
As Love will draw us to the heavens,
The other casts us back into the dust;
One is the soul's, the other of the senses—
Its bowstring trained on rank offenses.

Much is made of this sonnet. Scholars who cannot conceive of their idol's homosexuality insist the poem speaks exclusively of platonic male love. Michelangelo, they maintain, is fighting his attraction to women because he sees it as sinful. Others uphold the poem as proof of Michelangelo's homosexuality.

The poem need not be read as a denigration of women, but of heterosexuality. Nor should it be read as gospel truth;
surely Dante's love for Beatrice, whom he had seen but twice and who inspired his life's work, was more divine than some of Oscar Wilde's more sordid escapades with street-corner lads.
Many ideas are floating around the center about Gay people opening small businesses, and to serve the Gay community. It's not as impossible as one may think.

At present, my newly invested business adventure is making it. Why? A large part of why is my Gay clientele who know that I'm Gay. In return, my first choice is to support other Gay owned businesses. Call this an effort to help our brother and sister Gays, a return of support or the friendliness I know I'll get. Whatever you call it, call it good. Gay is good. Gay businesses are good.

Only a year ago I was unemployed. After being back to work for two months, I began my own adventure, with a small loan, little capital, and a lot of willingness to try.

If you have a business, let Gay people know you do. If you are thinking of opening one, there are many of us who might be able to assist with some ideas or in some other ways. If you're not interested in business at all, support the ones owned by Gays. Gay businesses should be listed at the Gay Community Services Center or in the Fifth Freedom. Do your part and advertise.

POEMS BY DENNIS A. DONNELLAN

IN LOVE

It is a demure wind indeed that flows a reminder across my face
that has guided countless vessels
to their now peaceful destinations,
So this bit of nature's fineness
echos love as I awake
amid the stars and clouds
I walk.

UNTITLED

Sometimes through all the commotion
We just can't see where we're going
And our goal of love Becomes obscured and then,
ignored.
If this be the case
And I journey so blindly past
your heart
Forgive my misplaced emotion,
For you are whom I seek.

TO MICHAEL C.

You seemed so free to encounter the lighter
aspects of life
Enjoying the company of a warm admirer
Greeting my every kiss
With such a deep smile;
Becoming lost in you was so easy.
As years pass
And the sun casts a shadow on darkness itself
and books crumble noisily into dust
one shared heartbeat remains transfixed in time.
